I AM HERE!

PHILIP, DUKE OF NEVERS, AND THE LITTLE PARISIAN.

PART THIRD.

CHAPTER XIII.—THE STREET INTERVIEW.

The two shadows were not again visible on the curtains. The Prince had seated himself; the Hunchback stood before him in a respectful yet firm attitude. There were three entrances to the Regent's apartments, one public into the large ante-room, the two others private, one of which was kept by an old lady who had once been an opera-singer, the other by Le Breant, who had been groom to the Regent, whose voice we heard at the end of the dark passage when the Hunchback entered by the Court of Fountains.

It was expected that the Regent was alone and uneasy.

He was still in his dressing-gown, though the fete had been a long time begun. His hair, which was rich and abundant, was still in curlpapers, and he wore a particular kind of gloves to preserve the whiteness of his hands. His mother, in her Memoirs, says he inherited this excessive care of his person from his father, who was even to latter years as particular as any coquette.

The Regent was about five and forty, but looked older from the worn expression of his features. He was handsome, notwithstanding; his features were noble and engaging, his eyes were of feminine softness, and showed kindness almost to a fault; his figure slightly stooping, except in company. His lips and cheeks had the effeminacy peculiar to the Orleans family.—The Princess of Palatine, his mother, had imparted to him some of her German good humor and ready wit, but she had kept the best part herself.

Upon certain constitutions debauchery leaves few traces. Men of iron may drink with impunity. Louis of Orleans was not of the number, and his face and figure already bore traces of his intemperance, and one could easily prognosticate that death lurked not far distant in a bottle of champagne.

The Hunchback was introduced.

"Was it you who wrote to me from Spain?" asked the Regent, eyeing him from head to foot.

"No, sir," replied the Hunchback, respectfully.

"And from Brussels?"

"No."

"Nor from Paris?"

"Neither."

The Regent looked at him again.

"It struck as curious that you should be Lagardere."

The Hunchback bowed with a deprecating smile.

"I did not allude to what you imagined. I have never seen Lagardere," said the Regent, with kind seriousness.

"Sire," replied the Hunchback, still smiling, "he was called handsome Lagardere when he was in the light cavalry of your royal uncle. I could never have been handsome, or in the light cavalry."

"What is your name?"

"Master Louis, at home; abroad, people like myself have generally a nickname."

"Where do you live?"

"At a distance."

"That is to say, you had rather not tell?"

"Yes, your Highness."

Philip of Orleans looked at him severely.

"I have clever police, who can easily learn."

"As your Highness makes it a point of knowing, I live in the palace of the Prince Gonzagues."

"In his palace?" repeated the Regent, astonished.

The Hunchback bowed.

"Is it a very long time ago that I first heard Lagardere spoken of," said the Regent thoughtfully; he used to be an impudent bully."

"He has done his best to expiate his follies."

"What are you to him?"

"Nothing—yet all; he has no friends."

"Why did he not come himself?"

"Because he could made use of me."

"If I wished to see him, where could I find him?"

"I cannot answer your Highness' question. Nevertheless, you, sir, have a clever police—try."

"Do you say that in defiance?"

"Only, your Royal Highness, as a threat.—An hour hence, Lagardere can be out of your reach, and the step he has now taken he will never renew."

"He has taken it now, then, against his will?"

"Yes, sire, unwillingly."

"Why?"

"Because the happiness of his whole life is staked on the step, which he need not have taken."

"And what forced him to take it?"

"An oath."

"Made to whom?"

"To a dying man."

"And this man was called——"

"You knew him well, your Highness. It was Philip, Duke of Novers."

The Regent covered his face.

"It is nearly twenty years," he murmured in a mournful tone, "but I have never forgotten him. How dearly I loved him! Since his death, I have never clasped the hand of a true friend."

The Hunchback looked at him with emotion.

The Duke recovered himself, and said calmly: "I was a near relation of the Duke of Nevers. As Prince and as his cousin, I owe protection to his widow, who is, besides, the wife of one of my dearest friends. If their daughter yet lives, I promise she shall be a rich heiress, and marry a prince if she likes. In regard to the murder of my poor Philip, when I heard of his death, I took an oath to be avenged, and I will keep it, though it is said that I have but one virtue, that of forgetting injuries; and now that I govern the State, the vengeance will be no more than simple justice."

The Hunchback bowed in silence.

"There are several things which I wish to learn. How is it that Lagardere was so long before he addressed himself to me?"

"Because he wished, before he gave up his guardianship, that his ward should be grown up, and able to know her friends from her foes."

"He has proof of what he states?"

"He has all except one."

"What is that?"

"The proof that could confound the murderer."

"Then he knows the murderer?"

"He believes he knows him, he has a mark by which he could verify his suspicions."

"And this mark would be proof?"

"Your Highness shall judge shortly. In regard to the birth and identity of the young lady, all is complete."

The Regent considered a moment, then said: "What oath had Lagardere taken?"

"To be a father to the child."

"Then he must have been present at his death?"

"He was. Nevers in his last moments confided to him the guardianship of his child."

"Did Lrgardere draw his sword to defend Nevers?"

"He did what he could. After the Duke's death he carried off the child, though twenty swords were against him."

"I know that he is a famous swordsman, but your answers are very mysterious. How can it be, as you say, that he only suspects the murderer?"

"It was a dark night, and he was masked; he struck from behind."

"Then it was the master himself who dealt the death-blow?"

"It was the master; the Duke fell, crying out to him: 'Friend, avenge my death!'"

"It was not, then, the Marquis of Caylus?"

"The Marquis has been dead many years," replied the Hunchback; "Nevers' assassin still lives. Your Highness has only to say the word, and Lagardere promises to show him to you tonight."

"Then," said the Regent, "Lagardere is in Paris."

The Hunchback bit his lip.

"If he is in Paris, he is mine!"

He rang. "Desire Monsieur Machault to to come to me at once."

The Hunchback recovered himself, and said, looking at his watch:

"Sire, Lagardere is now waiting for me outside of Paris: where, I will not say, if you put me on the rack. It is now eleven; if he does not receive a message from me in half-an-hour, he will set off for the frontiers—your police will not be able to catch him."

"You shall be hostage for him," cried the Regent.

"Oh! as regards me, sire," said the Hunchback, smiling, "if you desire to keep me prisoner, I am in your power," and he crossed his arms over his bosom.

The superintendent of police entered. He was dim-sighted, and not observing the Hunchback, began before he was questioned—

"There is something new, your Royal Highness; you can no longer show clemency in the case. I hold the proof of their secret concert with Alberoni. There are Cellamare, Villeroy, Villers, all in the plot with the Duke and Duchess of Maine!"

"Silence!" cried the Regent, who did not speak for several minutes, but secret observed the Hunchback, who stood firm and composed. "Machault," he said at last, "it was precisely about Cellamare and the others that I wished to speak to you. Wait for me, if you please, in the next room."

Machault looked through his glass with evident curiosity at the Hunchback; as he left the room, the Duke added—

"I desire you to send me a pass, ready sealed and signed."

The superintendent again examined the Hunchback.

The Prince could no longer keep serious.

"Why do they put blind men at the head of the police?" he said; then added, "This Lagardere makes treaties with me; he has probably some interested motive in view."

"Your Highness is mistaken; Lagardere requires nothing: it would not be in the power even of the Regent of France to reward him."

"Indeed!" said the Duke. "We really must see this romantic personage: he will have famous success at court, and set the fashion again of knight-errantry. How long shall we have to wait?"

"Two hours."

"All the better; he will form an interlude between the Indian ballet and the supper, though he is not in the programme."

A servant entered bringing the pass signed by the Minister Le Blanc and Machault.

The Regent himself filled up the paper.

"Monsieur de Lagardere," he said, "has not committed unpardonable crimes. The late King was severe upon duelling, and he was right.—But, fortunately, manners have altered since then, swords keep better in their scabbards now. Lagardere's pardon shall be registered to-morrow, and here is his safe conduct. You will warn your friend that any violence on his part will cancel the efficacy of this parchment."

"The time of violence is past," said the Hunchback, solemnly.

"What do you mean?"

"That two days since Lagardere could not have accepted this clause."

"Wherefore?" said the Duke, hastily.

"Because he had sworn ta avengd Nevers."

"Go on," said the Regent.

"Lagardere," said the Hunshback, slowly, "when he carried off the child, said to the murderers: 'You shall all die by my hand.' He knew seven of them—those are dead."

"By his hand?" said the Duke, turning pale.

The Hunchback bowed.

"And the two others?" asked the Regent.

The Hunchback paused, then replied—

"There are some heads so high, your Highness, that kings and governors do not like them to fall on the scaffold. The noise of their fall shakes the State. Lagardere gives your Highness the choice, he desired me to tell you so.—The eighth murderer is only a servant, the ninth is the master—that man must die. If your Highness object to the headsman, let this man and Lagardere draw their swords on each other."

"The cause is just," said the Regent, offering the parchment. "I do this in memory of my dear Philip, and if Lagardere needs help——"

"Lagardere," said the Hunchback, "desires only one thing from your Highness."

"What is that?"

"Secrecy—one word might be fatal."

"I shall be mnte."

The Hunchback bowed profoundly, and withdrew.

"Did you get what you wanted, my little friend?" said Le Breant, when he saw him return.

"Yes; but now I want to see the fete," and he slid a louis into his hand.

"My goodness, what a famous dancer!" cried the other.

"Moreover," said the Hunchback, "I want the key of your lodge in the garden," and he slid a double louis into his hand.

"What strange fancies the little fellow has! Here is the key."

"And I want you, besides, to carry into your lodge the parcel that I left with you this morning."

"And will there be another double louis for that?"

"Yes, two."

"Bravo, what a generous little fellow; it must be for an assignation."

"Perhaps," answered the Hunchback, smiling.

"If I were a woman, I should love you in spite of your hump, you are so generous. But," said the old man, "you must have a card to get in; those guards on duty don't understand a joke."

"I have mine in my pocket; only bring me the parcel."

"Directly, my little friend. Take that passage, turn to the right, the landing is lighted, and go down the steps. Amuse yourself, and good luck to you."

CHAPTER XIV.—A GAME OF CARDS.

In the garden the crowd was still increasing. It was especially great near the statue of Diana, which bordered on the Prince Regent's own apartments. Everyone wished to know why he kept people waiting. We will not waste much time on the conspiracies. The intrigues of the Duke and Duchess of Maine, of Villeroy, and the Spanish embassy, though fertile in dramatic incidents, belong not to our story. It is sufficient to remark in passing that the Regent was surrounded with enemies. The Parliament both hated and despised him; the clergy were generally hostile to him; the old generals of the army felt only disdain for his good humored policy; and even from certain members of his own council he met with continual opposition.

Still, one must allow that the financial display of late had been of immense advantage in turning away from him general animadversion. Personally, none but Madame de Montespan's children, whom Louis XIV. had legitimized, could have any strong feeling against a Prince of the neuter gender, who had not a grain of wickedness in his disposition, but whose kindliness bordered upon indifference. One only detests those for whom one might have felt a strong affection. Philip of Orleans had many boon companions, but no friends. Law's bank bought the favor of Princes. It is hard word to say, but history confirms the fact. The Princes once bought, the Duke followed, and Madame de Montespan's children, who had been legitimized, remained alone. Among the number of writers who condemn, probably on too just grounds, the Regent, Duclos, in his secret memoirs, speaks of him with the greatest partiality, and it is evidently his opinion that the Duke could never have kept his position had it not been for Law's bank.

The young King, Louis XV, was adored. His education was confided to people who were hostile to the Regent; for even the indifferent public trusted little to the probity of the Duke, and feared that the great-grand child of Louis XIV might die prematurely, as his father and grand-father had done.

At first the Duke of Orleans treated all attacks against him with carelessness and disdain. Soft earth makes the best resistance to canon, and a mattress a better defence than a metal shield. The Duke slept behind his mattress. When he was forced to show himself, he did so, and there being little courage or firmness among his enemies, his presence alone intimidated them.

At this stage of our story the Regent still remained quiet, though clamors were heard on all sides against him, even under his windows and in his palace; and it is true he gave but too much cause for scandal. His private life was detestable. Under his government, France was a large dismantled ship towed by another vessel. That other vessel was England.

If this night, in the gardens of the Palais Royal, there was some enthusiasm, founded on the apparent success of Law's bank, still there was much discontent among politicians, financiers and old people. In this last class, composed of those who had been young and brilliant under Louis XIV., were the Barons of La Hunaudaye and Brabanchois, who consoled themselves with the reflection that in their day the ladies were more beautiful, men more witty, the sky of a finer blue, the wind less cold, wine far better, servants more faithful, and chimneys less given to smoking. Still at this fete the gay, brilliant crowd thought little of politics. The grand people were now beginning to assemble. The Duke of Bourbon led in the Princess of Conti, the Chancellor d'Aguesseau the Princess Palatine, and Abbe Dubois was paying his court to the English Ambassador, Lord Stair.

A rumor now arose, which for a moment caused to be forgotten even the delay of the Regent and the absence of Mr. Law himself. It was the arrival of Peter the Great, of Russia, under the charge of Field Marshal Tesse, and a guard of thirty men, who were charged never to leave him. No easy task, as the Muscovite Emperor's movements were rapid and his freaks sudden. He had come to France to learn the art of government and other things.

The Regent, who no doubt would fain have avoided this terrible visit, yet treated his imperial guest with splendid courtesy. But Parisian curiosity, highly excited by the arrival of the barbarous monarch, had not yet had time to appease itself, for the Czar brooked no interference, and when the people crowded round his palace, ordered his guard to charge them. The poor Field Marshal would rather made ten campaigns than undertake such a charge. The Regent had wished to dazzle the Czar by the magnificence of his hospitality, but the Czar would not be dazzled, In the splendid bedroom that had been prepared for him he ordered a camp-bedstead to be brought, and slept thereon. He entered the shops and talked familiarly with the people; but he was incognito, and Parisian curiosity was at fault. The privileged few who had seen him said he was tall, well made, rather thin, dark, with large vivacious eyes, piercing and sometimes savage. Occasionally a nervous convulsion passed over his features entirely altering their expression. This peculiarity was attributed to the poison that the groom-in-waiting, Zoubow, had given him in his childhood. When he chose it, it is said, his deportment was gracious, even agreeable.

When it was known that the Czar was at the ball, there was great crowding to get sight of him; but this excitement littled trouble our gamblers under the Indian tent; not one had given up gold, and bank notes continued to change hands rapidly. Peyrolles held a splendid hand, and also the pool. Chaverny, rather pale, still tried to laugh.

"Ten thousand crowns!" cried Peyrolles.

"I accept," answered Chaverny.

"With what?" asked Navailles.

"On my note of hand."

"This is not the way to play at the Regent's" said the Duke of Tresmes; and then he added, disdainfully "this place is a regular gambling house!"

"On which you have no tithe, Duke," answered Chaverny, with a bow.

A general laugh arose at the expense of Monsieur de Tresmes, who being governor of Paris, had a tenth of the profits on all gambling houses, and was said to be a bold one himself—nothing derogatary at that time, when the palace of the Princess Carignan was said to be the most dangerous hell in Paris.

"Ten thousand crowns!" repeated Peyrolles.

"I take it," cried a rough voice in the crowd, and a shower of notes fell on the table. No one knew the voice, and every one turned to look at the speaker. He was a bold, tall fellow, with a round unpowdered wig, and plain linen collar and ruffles. His dress contrasted strangely with the rich elegance of his neighbors. He wore a doublet of thick maroon cloth, with grey trousers, anld arge clumsy boots of greasy leather. Around his waist was a band which held a seaman's cutlass. He looked a true corsair.

In one deal Peyrolles had won the ten thousand crowns.

"Double," cried the stranger.

Peyrolles accepted, and was again successful.

"Double," still called out the corsair.

"You must be very rich, sir," said Peyrolles.

The man with the cutlass answered not, but threw the money on the table.

"Peyrolles has won again!" cried all around.

"Double still!" persisted the stranger.

"Bravo!" cried Chaverny; "he is a bold player."

The stranger unceremoniously thrust aside those near him, and placed himself at the table, close to Peyrolles. The factotum was again successful.

"Enough!" cried the man with the cutlass; and added coldly, "Make way, there!" at the same moment drawing his sword and seizing Peyrolles by the ear.

"What are you about?" cried all around.

"Don't you perceive," replied the stranger, "the man is a knave?"

Peyrolles tried to draw his sword. He was as pale as death.

The man with the cutlass was no triffer and knew how to use his weapon. A well executed and rapid thrust made the spectators draw back. A sharp, well directed blow broke Peyrolles' in two.

"If you stir, I'll not answer for your life; if you are stiill I shall only cut your ears off."

Peyrolles uttered stifled cries, and offered to give back the money. A crowd encompassed the two men. The stranger, using his sword as a razor, was about calmly to begin the surgical operation, when a great tumult was heard at the entrance of the tent.

The Prince Kourakine, Russian Ambassador at the French Court, rushed impetuously into the tent, his face bathed in perspiration, his hair and clothes in disorder. Behind him Field Marshal Tesse followed by his thirty guards.

"Your Highness, stop—in heaven's name, stop!" cried out the General and the Prince at once.

The stranger turned calmly round, while the General threw himself between him and his victim; but he did not touch him; he only bowed profoundly.

Then people were aware that the tall fellow with the maroon doublet was no other than the Emperor of Russia.

He slightly knit his brow, and said to Tesse:

"What do you want with me? I am only doing justice."

Prince Kourakine whispered a few words in his ear. He let go of Peyrolles, slightly reddened, and said, with a smile—

"You are right—I am not at home here. I had forgotten."

He saluted with his hand the wonder-struck crowd, with a haughty grace that did not sit ill upon him, and left the tent, followed by his guards. They were accustomed to his tricks, and passed their time running after him.

Those not interested in the gambling followed the Czar, who soon escaped from them, and leaving the palace at once, and jumping into the first carriage he could find, went off to his three bottles at a sitting.

Navailles took the cards out of Peyrolles' hands, and gently pushed him out of the circle.

"Gentlemen," cried Noce, arriving in violent haste, "leave your cards; you are playing over a volcano! The chief of police has discovered three conspiracies that would shame Cataline's. The Regent alarmed, has been shut up with a little man in black, to be told his fortune."

"Oh! then, the little man in black is a fortune-teller?"

"Yes, indeed. He predicted to the Regent that Mr. Law would be drowned in the Mississippi, and that the Duchess of Berri would marry the fool Riom."

"Hush, hush!" cried the most prudent. The others laughed.

"Oh! everybody talks of it," continued Noce. "And the little black man also predicted that Dubois would be made a Cardinal."

"A likely thing," said Peyrolles.

"And that Master Peyrolles," added Noce, "would become an honest man before he dies."

An explosion of laughter. Every one left the table, and crowded to the entrance of the tent; for Noce had cried out:

"Look! look! the little man himself!"

Every one saw him slowly descend the steps of the pavilion. The guards stopped him at the bottom. The little Hunchback showed his card and passed on.

JACOB BARKER.—One of the notabilities of New Orleans is Jacob Barker, the banker, who was well known 'Change in New York, some sixty years ago. Fitz Greene Halleck was his private secretary for nearly twenty years previous to his leaving Gotham for the Crescent City. He has recently published a pamphlet of sixty-five pages, entitled the "Ballot-Box, the Palladium of our Liberties." It will be remembered by our readers that the military authorities there suppressed his paper, the Advocate, some fifteen months ago. I have read his brochure and find it filled with fine Union sentiments. Although nearly ninety years old, Mr. Barker is quite active, and may daily be seen at his office during business hours. I had the pleasure of dining with him the other day, and found that he enjoyed a good dinner, with the accompaniment of wine and cigars, as well as his guest of thirty summers. He bears a very striking resemblance to Franklin, to whom, through his mother's family, he is related. I was delighted in listening to his recollections of the early days of New York, and his anecdotes of the historical names of those who flourished there and throughout the country, at the beginning of the century.

SATURDAY MORNING, MAY 7, 1864.

OUR RESOURCES.

Communities like individuals have natural and artificial resources of wealth, which, if properly managed, make them powerful and respected, but which, if allowed to be dormant and not brought into usefulness, only render them objects of contempt. Heretofore our town has relied solely upon the products of the mines for its means of support, and when from want of water the revenue from that source has been cut off, has been compelled to lie idle and unemployed. Our citizens have failed to take advantage of the great march of improvement going on throughout the land, and seem disposed to keep out of its way as much as possible. But a few enterprising men amongst us, determined that the place should no longer slumber in obscurity, and accordingly proclaimed to the country that there really was such a place as Dutch Flat, and that although the name might be sneared at as insignificant, yet that its inhabitants were in the possession of a secret of the most vital importance to the nation, that they knew a route more practicable, easier, and more direct than any yet discovered, for a Great National Railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and one which if once tested would prove itself to be the only route practicable and easy. As soon as this was announced enterprising men at once came amongst us, enquired for, sought and found the road to be all that was claimed for it. The great Railroad project became no longer a mere hypothesis but a fixed fact. Other enterprising men saw at once that the route practicable for a railroad, was also practicable for a wagon road, that it would require years to complete the one, while the other could be built in a few months, and a wagon road was at once started to connect Sacramento city with Virginia city, the two great depots of California and Washo. Before the first wagon road company had completed their road to the Summit, another company was formed, and another wagon road from Dutch Flat to the Henness road was started which in a few days will be complete, and which the projectors assert will compare with any road in the United States, being on a grade so easy, that the heaviest loads can be drawn over it, winter and summer. The first company ran their road so far to the southwest as to wholly ignore it, from the fact that they could procure no material aid from our citizens to build the road through the town. The latter company propose to complete their road by running it through Main street, provided our citizens will subscribe the sum of two thousand dollars to pay for the cutting and filling necessary on Main and Sacramento streets. Shall this sum be raised and the travel from Sacramento and Washo pass through our town or shall some other town be built up near us to reap all the great benefits which will accrue?—Shall we as a town step out of the way of these great improvements, and rely alone on our mining interests as heretofore, or shall we by the expenditure of a small, yes, an insignificant sum of money, build up a town second to none in the mountains? Have we any energy? are we all asleep, or are we blind? These are questions which we may not answer until it is too late. Let the wagon roads all pass by us, and will not the enterprising citizens of Gold Run soon wrest from us the prize? Gold Run is wide awake, it is a better location than Dutch Flat, and if lots can be procured there at a nominal rate, as they can be, it will soon boast of more stores, saloons, wagon shops and other business houses than we can. Every man amongst us is either directly or indirectly interested in this matter, and it is for us to say now, whether we will build our town up and make it wealthy and respectable, or sink it into that oblivion from whence it has so lately emenated.—Many suppose that wealth and greatness will be thrust upon us against our wishes, that those who wish to procure goods, get a dinner or a drink, will come here anyway, that the patronage of the heavy teams is not wanted or desirable, and that the four or five daily stages will come through town any way. Such may prove true, but it is not at all likely, for enterprising men will get in the way of business always, and cut it off from those who are waiting for it to hunt them up. If men wish employment they have to seek for it, or hold out such inducements as will bring it to them. Cannot merchants and mechanics furnish their customers with what they want, as cheap on the direct line of the road, as they can in Dutch Flat, which will be out of their way, and will they not do it? Let us wake up and stir ourselves; let us add to our resources; let us be somebody; and if we must be Dutch Flat, let us make Dutch Flat be known from ocean to ocean. Let it be hereafter said of us in the language of the immortal bard: BULLY for DUTCH FLAT.

PIC-NIC.—The children and others connected with the Dutch Flat Union Sunday school assembled last Monday in front of the picture gallery of Mr. O. B. Silver, and after being arranged a beautiful picture was taken of the group, when, headed by Capt. Schubert's Guards they marched down Main to Sacramento street, through Sacramento to the grove where they crowned Miss Alice McCulloch as May Queen, and afterwards engaged in the innocent sports of the day, and richly enjoyed themselves until the afternoon, when they left for their respective homes.

CONCERT.—On Thursday evening last Ossian E. Dodge and Wm. Hayward gave ou of their chaste and pleasing entertainments in this place. Those who were fortunate enough to hear them were well pleased and sorry that the entertainment was not prolonged.

BEGGING FOR FREEDMEN.—We notice in the Sacramento Bee of Thursday last a well written article on persons coming from Atlantic States for the purpose of begging for money for the benefit of negroes who have been freed since the rebellion broke out. It has been claimed by persons advocating the negro policy that they were capable of earning their own living, but we find as soon as they are free, commissions are started to relieve them of the necessity of making an exertion. Why this anxious solicitude on the part of the white man for the negro, when so many widows and orphans,—made so by the war—claim the protection of all good feeling men? We copy the following suggestions from the Bee and endorse them.—If any are to be assisted, let the white people come first:

"We notice in the Bay papers that the Rev. Dr. Haynes has lately arrived from the East for the purpose of soliciting contributions from our citizens in aid of the freedmen—those negroes who have been liberated from slavery by the operation of the present war. With all due respect for the Rev. Dr. Haynes, and for those engaged with him on behalf of the "freedmen," we would suggest to them and to the charitably disposed citizens of California that there are now not less than 200,000 white men, who, as soldiers fighting for their country, have become permanently disabled by sickness and wounds incurred in defense of the nation; that each battle adds to this number; that a very large proportion of these soldiers have wives and children dependent upon them for support, for whom it is the duty of the country to provide; that a great battle is every day expected, and that after that battle, according to the experience of the past, there will most likely be made the most urgent appeals for aid to the Sanitary Fund. We beg also further to suggest that our charities are first due and always due to the classes above mentioned, and that so long as a single soldier or member of a soldier's family is in a condition of want and suffering it will be wrong and unpatriotic to waste our charities on other objects."

LUCKY ESCAPES.—We have been informed, during the past two weeks of three four almost miraculous escapes from death by persons working in several different claims near here.—In the Iowa a cave occurred and those engaged had barely time to get out of the way, Mr. J. O. Higby being caught by the feet. A day or two after, the hands engaged in the Deep Shaft claim had just left the pipes in order to clear the boxes, when, without the slightest warning, tuns of bank came thundering down, completely covering the places the men had but so recently occupied. Our people cannot be too careful in watching for the dangers by which they are constantly surrounded.

A HANDSOME PRESENT.—The Democracy of Cass county, Indiana, presented the Democratic Pharos a power press on the 18th of March last. It must be gratifying to Mr. Hall, the editor, to know that his efforts to maintain pure Democratic principles have been received and valued by a people so appreciative and intelligent. May the Pharos continue to be a light and a beacon to the good people of Logansport.

MILITARY BALL.—The Pacific Guard of this place will give a grand military and civic ball on Friday next, the 13th instant, in compliment to the Little York Union Guard, who will be the guests of our soldiers on that occasion. At 2 o'clock on the day named the Pacific Guard will present to their neighbors and guests a beautiful national flag procured expressly for the occasion. Every preparation is being made to make the visit and stay of our neighbors a pleasant and agreeable one. Such reunions cannot but result in the kindliest feelings and warmest friendships. We wish all parties a happy time, and they'll have it too, unless something breaks.

EXPRESS.—Mr. Hopkinson, the accommodating expressman from this place to Nevada, will start an express route to Donner Lake about the first of June next, where he will run once a week, taking papers, letters and packages.—We bespeak for Mr. Hopkinson the patronage of the people at the new mines, knowing him to be entirely reliable and faithful.

LACUSTRAL DISCOVERIES.—We have more than once had occasion to mention the remains of those villages built upon lakes, where primitive man seems to have sought refuge from the attacks of wild beasts; we have also stated that in Switzerland, the country where these lacustral settlements, as they are now called, are most frequently met with, M. Tryon was engaged in a series of archæological researches concerning them. The excavations effected under his guidance, at a place called Concise, have brought to light a quantity of highly interesting articles, from which it appears that the lacustral village of Concise was one of the most important manufactories of all kinds of flint implements used during the age of stone; and that the peculiar business of the inhabitants consisted in fashioning stag's antlers into handles for flint knives, chisels and other instruments. Several pieces have been found which had fallen into the water in an unfinished state; others have also come to light perfectly finished, and others again worn out by constant use. Bone was also turned into sharp instruments, such as chisels, daggers, etc. Among the instruments found there are some made of serpentine, a stone which does not exist in Switzerland; whence it must be inferred that at that primitive period there existed some notions of barter. Some of the knives are very curious, being made of the tusks of the wild boar; one of three tusks is nearly nine inches long. Boar's teeth have been found pierced with a hole, and used, probably, to be worn in the shape of necklaces, or as amulets. Curious pottery has been discovered, not indeed entire, but still enough to be able to ascertain the shape and style of the various vessels employed either for cooking or keeping provisions. But the most interesting are those of wood, on account of their perishable nature, and because they show what men of those days were able to do with flint instruments alone. The village itself stood upon many thousand piles, each of which had to be cut and pointed with a flint hatchets, wooden bowls, very nicely hollowed out; and then the handles above mentioned are among the best specimens of antidiluvian craft as yet discovered.—Galigni.

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The Legislature, at its last session, gave true expression to the wishes of the people, in passing the law extending aid to the Company engaged in constructing the western portion of this great national highway. Probably there is not a man, woman or child in this State, that has left a home in the East, who is not anxiously looking forward to the time when they can revisit the scenes of their childhood by this new means of conveyance, avoiding the perils of the sea and the hardships of the overland route.—The greater part of our population therefore view this work with uncommon interest, and will submit to any reasonable taxation having for its object the speedy completion of the road. Whatever interested parties and the enemies of the enterprise may say against the road, the popular heart beats strong in its favor, for it is truly the people's road.

The Legislature did well, therefore, in passing the bill, and the Governor in approving it. The measure is plain and simple in itself, and easily understood, though great efforts have been made to lead the people to believe that it burdens them with an enormous debt. A brief examination of its terms will show the fallacy of such a statement. It authorizes the Company to issue its own bonds, payable in twenty years, secured by a mortgage upon the road, to an amount not exceeding $12,000,000, at a rate of interest not exceeding seven per cent. per annum. The interest on $1,500,000 of these bonds is to be made payable at the State Treasury. It further provides that a tax of eight cents on the $100 be levied and collected as other State revenue, to be paid into a "Pacific Railroad Fund," from which the interest on this $1,500,000 of the bonds of the Company is to be paid as it becomes due semi-annually, and the surplus is to be paid into the general fund. Thus it will be seen that the State pays not exceeding $105,000 a year to aid the road. No State bonds are issued, and no State debt created, as the money to pay this interest is paid by taxation. The principal of the bonds will have to be paid by the Company when they become due.

In consideration for these payments of interest, the Company agree to convey over their railroad, for all time to come, free of charge, all public messengers, convicts going to the State Prison lunatics going to the State Insane Asylum, materials for the construction of the Capitol, articles for the State Fairs, and all troops and munitions of war belonging to the State. The Company is also required to construct not less than twenty miles of their road each year, and also to convey to the State a half section, or three hundred and twenty acres of land, in Placer county, on the line of their railroad, including a valuable quarry of granite.

The State thus receives a fair value for all the aid it extends. In time of war, or insurrection, the use of the railroad for the transportation of troops and munitions of war, will be invaluable to the State. Our present civil war has demonstrated the immense value of railroads, and the State can command the use of this road in emergencies, without any liability to compensate the Company therefor. Its use for a single campaign will far exceed in value all the money paid during the twenty years.

The furnishing of granite for the State Capitol, from the quarries of the Company, will alone diminish the cost of that material to the State about one-half, and will thus save an immense sum, and that too immediately. In this connection we understand that the Company have offered to go beyond the requirements of the law, and furnish the State the iron necessary to lay a branch line to the Capitol, so that the stone will be taken from the quarries by the cars direct to the building, thus saving all expense of transportation to or from the cars.

The tract of land deeded by the Company will afford an excellent site for a branch prison, being located in the foothills in one of the healthiest portions of the State. The quarries on this tract will supply material for prison labor for centuries to come, without injuriously affecting the mechanical interests of the State, a matter of great importance. When the State needs such a branch, it will not be required to expend $500,000 for a site. The arrangement is therefore a most advantageous one to the State.

ANOTHER GREENBACK OPERATION.

ED. ENQUIRER:—A loud-mouthed, hypocritical supporter of the Government; one who by unaggravated threats invites transactions in Greenbacks and then complains of the action, has been guilty of a little operation in Greenbacks which the public generally should know in order that he may sustain his reputation as a man who desires the welfare of the Government, and a man in whom "confidence" may be placed: A gentleman of this place desiring to pay his National Revenue Tax requested L. Arnstein to forward the same to the Collector, which he at the time handed to Arnstein—ten dollars in gold—Arnstein at the time remarking that he could pay the tax in greenbacks, the gentleman replied that he was aware of the fact but wished the gold sent, and left with the understanding that the gold would be sent. Now this stickler after gold allowed his friend's gold to "stick" to his fingers, and paid the tax in legal tender notes, thereby "appropriating" to himself the difference between Greenbacks and gold. Mark the man! L. ARNSTEIN. These facts can be substantiated by affidavit, if necessary.

NEGRO EQUALITY, SOCIALLY and POLITICALLY.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.

It is worth everybody's while to stop and ask whither are we drifting? Take the following clipped from a Washington newspaper, as an illustration:

"Yesterday afternoon, as a colored boy named Henry Clay, carrying a bucket of oysters, was "tooting his horn" to bring up customers, a man named James Whalen told him to "stop a tooting," but Clay kept on a "tooting," and, turning around, put the end of the horn in Whalen's face and gave a loud "toot," when the latter effectually stopped the "tooting" by slapping the "tooter" in the face. Officer Hurley arrested Whalen, and took him before Justice Barnacle, who held him in bail to keep the peace."

This is clipped from the local column of the Star, a paper whose editor, at the commencement of the war, was a slave-owner. Since the war the patronage of the administration has so changed his views that he now considers a white man deserving of punishment if he resents an insult offered by a negro.

The administration now has four papers in its interest in this city; The Intelligencer and Star—relics of by-gone days surviving on departed glory and the droppings from the tables of the more immediate "organs," the Chronicle and Republican—the former of which is owned and controlled by the renegade Forney, and the latter by a batch of discharged correspondents of the New York press. All these papers are printed in the interests of the administration and the abolition party.

Only a few days ago these papers united in a shout of virtuous indignation because, in the city of New York, the street railway companies prohibited negroes from obtruding their odoriferous persons in the same cars with white passengers—taking occasion at the same time to deal some hits at Boston and Philadelphia for a like reason, and holding up the city of Washington as a bright and shining example of a better state of things, because, in this goodly city, the negro is entitled to the first choice of seats, not only in the street cars, but at all places of public resort.

The public has not failed to notice that at the levees of the President thus far this winter the negro has been the leading person in interest and distinction. Rising above the importance of Senators, Secretaries, Judges, Foreign Ministers, or any other dignitaries, Sambo has occupied the highest seat, and received the most marked consideration from the Chief Magistrate and his courtiers.

In the Senate Chamber we find the distinguished African not a bit less conspicuous.—Clothed in the army blue, all covered over with gold lace and brass buttons, he lays off in conscious importance in the galleries, while the Sumners, and Wilsons, and Chandlers, expound to him their views of his superior greatness to the white race.

To what are we drifting?

Social equality in theory and practice, being already virtually established between the races through the machinations of the ruling power, the next step is amalgamation. This step must and will follow as surely as the sun will continue to rise from day to day, if the present party be retained in office. For this our rulers are laboring with all their might. To this end are they pledged.

The right of suffrage will be given to the negro in the next Presidential election. Of this there can be no question. It is a part of the programme. It is now under advisement by the abolition leaders in Congress whether any legislation is necessary by Congress in order to give the soldiers a vote in that election. Already the wall of partition is broken down. "Soldiers" means black soldiers, as well as white. It is resolved that all wearing the Federal uniform shall vote. Fifty thousand blacks will doubtless be wearing that uniform next fall. Indeed, it is claimed by the friends of the administration that that number are now uniformed. One hundred thousand more are with the various armies as teamsters and servants, and an endless number are subsisting on the Government in the various contraband camps and "Freedmen's Homes" scattered throughout the country. If the few who are uniformed are enabled to vote, will not the same authority that is raked up to permit the outrage also permit and enable others to vote?

These points demand the attention of the sober, thinking masses of the country. Let it be remembered that not only is a white man in the city of Washington compelled to pocket the grossest insult a negro may offer him—an insult that no gentleman would quietly receive from a white man—but he must receive the same negro and all his greasy fellows into fraternal intercourse with him—ride with him, dine with him, walk with him, and forever remain with him as an equal, and, if anything, entitled to more consideration than a member of the unfortunate white race.

These are facts thrown out for the consideration of the people. MORRIS.

DEATH OF A DESPERADO.—A correspondent of the Pajaro Times writing from San Antonio, April 24th, gives the following account of the death of a noted desperado:

An affray took place in this vicinity last night, in which one of the greatest desperadoes of this State was killed and others badly wounded.—One Pancho Munos—known by the name of Pancho Torero—got leave of Dolores Aldaco to have a dance in his house on the night of the 23d of April; the dance took place, and all went well until two men made their appearance—one named Jose Romero, and the other named Bernardino Torres. They evidently came for the purpose of having a fight as both were armed. Romero y Torres commenced by catching hold of the women (with pistol in hand) and trying to drag them from the room. Pancho Munos told them to desist; a few words passed between them, when, before Romero could use his pistol Pancho stabbed him three times, when Romero ran away. Pancho received a slight wound on his hand, and while in the act of tying it up in an adjoining room, assisted by a woman named Lorenzo Sanches, with the window shutters closed, Bernardino Torres fired a pistol shot from the outside, which passed the shutter and through the upper jaw of Lorenzo Sanches and entered the body of Pancho near the heart.—Search was immediately made, but Torres could not be found; he ran away, leaving his horse, but was well armed, as it is supposed that he took the pistols from Romero befor leaving, as Romero was found this morning unarmed, and was still alive, but died in a few minutes after. Pancho was still alive, also the woman, but dangerously wounded. The Justice of the Peace has been sent for to hold an inquest on the body of Romero, who has at last met with his just dues. I have nothing more to tell you of at present, but as soon as an inquest is held I will give you more particulars.

INSOLVENT NOTICE.

In the County Court of the county of Placer.—In the matter of the petition of J. M. Higgins, an insolvent debtor.

PURSUANT to an order of the Hon. H. Fellows, Judge of the said county court, notice is hereby given to all the creditors of the said insolvent J. M. Higgins, to be and appear before the Hon. H. Fellows, County Judge aforesaid, in open court at the court room thereof, in the town of Auburn in said county, on Monday the 6th day of June A. D. 1864, at 10 o'clock, A. M., of that day, then and there to show cause, if any they can, why the prayer of said insolvent should not be granted, and he be discharged from his debts and liabilities, in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, and in the meantime, all proceedings against said insolvent be stayed. And, it is further ordered, that the Clerk issue a notice calling the creditors to appear at the time and place, and for the purpose aforesaid, that such notice be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in the Dutch Flat ENQUIRER, a newspaper published in said county of Placer.

Witness my hand and the seal of said court this 2d day of May A. D. 1864.

District Court Summons.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, County of Placer.—District Court of the 14th Judicial District of said State. The People of the State of California, to J. Dorenback, Capt. B. Pollard and Bartlett & Thomas, Greeting: You are hereby summoned to answer the complaint of J. J. Collins, in said Court, filed against you, within ten days from the service of this Writ, exclusive of the day of service, if served on you within said County, and within said District, twenty days; and if served on you without said County and District, then in forty days from such service, exclusive of the day of service, in an action commenced on the 22d day of February 1864 in said court, to obtain judgment against you defendant Dorenback for the sum of $1,155 00, with interest thereon from the 14th day of May 1862, at the rate of 2 per cent. per month, alleged to be due on a certain promissory note of that date and tenor; which note plaintiff now owns and holds, and also for a decree of foreclosure against certain property mortgaged by you to secure the payment of said note, and that the interest of you the defendants Pollard, and Bartlett & Thomas, in and to said property be declared subsequent to and subject to plaintiffs said mortgage, and that you all be barred and foreclosed &c., plaintiff also asks for $50 00 attorney's fee, and his cost of suit, all of which you will find more fully set out in complaint on file, a certified copy of which is herewith served. And you are hereby notified that if you fail to answer the complaint as directed, plaintiff will take judgment by default against you defendant Dorenbach for $1,155 and interest as claimed, $50 00 attorney's fees, and costs of suit, and apply to the court for the relief demanded, against all of the defendants herein.

In witness whereof, I, A. Huntley, Clerk of the Fourteenth Judicial District Court aforesaid, do hereunto set my hand and impress the seal of said Court, at office in Auburn, this 23d day of February 1864.

[I. R. S. 50 cts.] [L. S.]

A. HUNTLEY, Clerk.
By WM. SMITH, Deputy.

Upon reading the affidavit of plaintiff and being satisfied therefrom that a cause of action exists said J. Dorenback, and that he is a necessary and proper party therein, and it further appearing that said J. Dorenback is a non-resident of the State of California, and resides within the Territory of Nevada, it is hereby ordered that said summons as to said J. Dorenback be made by publication, that the same be published in the Dutch Flat ENQUIRER, a weekly newspaper printed in said county for at least once a week for the period of three months as provided by law.

Given at Auburn this 8th March A. D. 1864.

District Court Summons.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, County of Placer.—District Court of the 14th Judicial District of said State. The People of the State of California, to J. Dorenback, L. Arnstein, J. H. Willits, and Bradley & Gardner, greeting: You are hereby summoned to answer the complaint of J. J. Collins, in said Court, filed against you, within ten days from the service of this writ, exclusive of the day of service, if served on you in this county, but if served on you without said county, and within said District, twenty days; and if served on you without said county and District, then in forty days from such day of service, in an action commenced on the 7th day of January, 1864, in said Court, to obtain judgment against defendant Dorenback for the sum of $2,000 00 and interest thereon from September 17th, 1860 at the rate of 3 per cent. per month, less the sum of $180 00 paid December 8th, 1860, alleged to be due plaintiff on defendant Dorenback's certain promissory note for $2,000 00, with interest as above specified, dated September 17th, 1860, and for costs of suit and attorney's fees, and also for a decree of foreclosure against certain property mortgaged to secure the payment of said note; and that the other defendants herein named be required, each to disclose whatever interest he or they may have in said property, and that their interest or claim to the same be declared subsequent to and subject to plaintiff's mortgage, all of which you will find more fully set forth in plaintiff's complaint on file, a certified copy of which is herewith served. And you are hereby notified that if you fail to answer the complaint as directed, plaintiff will take judgment by default against you J. Dorenback for the sum of $2,000 00 and interest thereon from September 17th, 1860, at 3 per cent. per month, less $180 00, and costs and attorney's fees, and apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint.

In witness whereof, I, A. Huntley, Clerk of the Fourteenth Judicial District Court aforesaid, do hereunto set my hand and impress the seal of said Court, at office in Auburn, this 16th day of January, 1864.

THE DEAF WIFE AND THE DEAF AUNT.

I had an aunt coming to see me for the first time since my marriage, and I don't know what evil genius prompted the wickedness which I perpetrated towards my wife and my ancient relative.

"My dear," said I to my wife the day before my aunt's arrival, "you know aunt Mary is coming to-morrow; well, I forgot to mention a rather annoying circumstance in regard to her. She's very deaf—and, although she can hear my voice, to which she is accustomed, in an ordinary tone, yet you will be obliged to speak extremely loud in order to be heard. It will be rather inconvenient, but I know you will do everything in your power to entertain her and make her stay pleasant."

I then went to John T——, who loves a joke as well as any person I know of, told him to be at my house at six o'clock on the following evening, and I felt comparatively happy.

I went to the railroad with a carriage the next night, and when I was on my way home with my aunt, said:

"My dear aunt, there is rather an annoying infirmity that Anna (my wife) has, which I forgot to mention before. She is very deaf; although she can hear my voice, to which she is accustomed, in its ordinary tones, yet you will be obliged to speak extremely loud in order to be heard. I am very sorry she is so."

My aunt Mary, in the goodness of her heart, protested that she rather liked speaking loud, and that to do so would give her great pleasure.

I handed out my aunt; and she ascended the steps.

"I am delighted to see you," shrieked my wife, and the policeman on the opposite sidewalk started, and my aunt nearly fell down the steps.

"Kiss me dear," howled my aunt, and the hall lamp clattered, and the windows shook with fever and ague.

I looked out of the window—John had disappeared. Human nature could not stand it longer. I poked my head into the carriage and went into convulsions.

When I went into the parlor my wife was helping aunt Mary to take off her hat and cap, and there sat John with his long face of woe.

Suddenly—

"Did you have a pleasant journey," went off my wife, like a pistol, and John jumped to his feet.

"Rather dusty," was the response, in a warwhoop. So the conversation continued.

The neighbors for blocks around must have heard it; for when I was in the third story of the house I heard every word plainly.

In the course of the evening my aunt took occasion to say to me:

"How loud your wife speaks; don't it hurt her?"

I told her that all deaf persons spoke loudly, and that my wife, being used to it, was not affected by the exertion, and that aunt Mary was getting along finely with her.

Presently my wife said to me, very softly:

"Alf., how loud your aunt talks."

"Yes," said I, "all deaf persons do. You are getting along finely. She hears every word you say."

And I rather think she did.

Elated by their success in being understood, they went at it, hammer and tongs, until everything shattered again; and I was seriously afraid of a crowd collecting in front of my house.

But the end was near. My aunt, being of an investigating turn of mind, was desirous of finding out whether the exertion of talking so loud was not injurious to my wife. So—

"Does not talking so loud strain your lungs, my dear?" said she in an unhealthy hoot, for her voice was not so musical as when she was young.

"It is an exertion," shrieked my wife.

"Then why do you do it?" was the question.

"Because you can't hear me if I don't," squealed my wife.

"What?" my aunt fairly rivalling an enginewhistle this time.

I began to think of evacuating the premises, and looking around and seeing John gone, I stepped into the parlor, and there he lay flat on his back, rolling from side to side, with his fists poked into his ribs, and a most agonizing expression of countenance, but not uttering a sound. I immediately and involuntarily assumed a similar attitude, and I think from the relative position of our heads and boots and our endeavor to restrain our laughter, apoplexy must have inevitably ensued, if a horrible groan in which John gave vent to his attempt to suppress his risibility, had not betrayed our hiding-place.

In rushed my wife and my aunt, who, by this time, comprehened the joke; and such a scolding as I then got I never got before, and I hope never to get again.

I know not what the end might have been, if John, in his endeavor to be respectful and sympathetic had not given vent to such a diabolical noise, something between a groan and a horselaugh, that all gravity was up-set, and we all screamed in concert.

SPIRITUALISM EXPOSED.

The San Francisco Bulletin gives the following illustration of the manner in which people are humbugged by persons professing to be "mediums," and holding communion with departed spirits:

The extent to which the belief in spiritualism has spread throughout the State, and the pecuniary success which attends the performances of the so-called mediums, is at last eliciting some examination from incredulous persons with a view to detect the imposition. One case reported to us seems to have been quite successful. A gentleman in this city had a friend whose greatest failing was in being credulous in all matters seemingly supernatural. This friend was seized with the spiritual mania, and went to see a noted medium in this city. The interview was had in a room fronting on a open space. Upon stating his motive for calling, which was to communicate with the spirit of some dead person, he was told to write his questions on a piece of printing paper that lay on a table in the room, and afterwards to fold paper over the writing three or four times, and then hand it to the medium, who sat at a marble-top table which was near the window. This request was complied with, and the paper folded over the writing, as required, was handed to the medium. The latter, sitting with his face to the window, then smoothed the folded paper between his fingers and thumb for a few moments, and there, apparently inspired by the "spirit," wrote an appropriate answer on the bottom of the folded paper. The fact that the question was answered properly without the apparently knowing what was written, was urged by the credulous friend to the gentleman as a convincing proof of the existence of communication with the dead.

To solve the question, the incredulous gentleman paid a visit to the medium, and the same operation was successfully gone through with. Puzzled but not convinced, and thinking that there must be something connected with the smoothing of the paper between the medium's fingers before the answer was written, the gentlemen on leaving quietly, bronght the paper away with him. Musingly he sat down by a window, and without fixed design, read the question, and folded the paper over it, the same as when he handed it to the medium, went through the fingering operation. Strange to say, an indistinct trace of writing showed thro' the folded paper as it passed through his fingers and on repeating the fingering carefully he was able to read the light pencilled words through four thicknesses of paper. This at once explained the mystery, as the medium, assisted by the reflection of a white table-top, was able to read it all the better. We have been shown the written paper. It is certainly a curiosity, the light pencilling showing through the paper as above described. The paper to all appearance, is common printing paper; but medical men who have been shown it, state their belief that it is chemically prepared for the medium purpose.

ABERNETHY once said to a rich but dirty patient, who consulted him about an eruption:—"Let your servant bring you three or four pails of water, and put it into a wash tub; take off your clothes, get in it, and rub yourself well with soap and a rough towel, and you'll recover." "This advice seems like telling me to wash myself," said the patient. "Well," said Abernethy, "it may be open to such a construction."

IF I argue with a man who is in a house on the other side of the street why can't we ever agree? Because we argue from different premises.

Proceedings of the County Democratic Central Committee.

Pursuant to notice, the Democratic Central Committee met in Auburn, at the Placer Herald office, on Wednesday, April 6th, 1864, when on motion of Col. Newman, Hon. Jos. Walkup, (who represented J. C. Ball, of Township No. 1, by proxy,) was elected Chairman, pro tem.

On motion of Jo Hamilton, it was resolved, that a County Convention be held in Auburn, on SATURDAY, MAY 7th, 1864, and that the Primary Election be held on the Saturday previous, April 30th, and that the following be the ratio of Delegates for each precinct:

| Precincts | No. Del. | Precincts. | No. Del. |

| Smith's Ranch | 2 | Dunn Shed | 2 |
| Poverty Bar | 2 | Fuller's Ranch | 2 |
| Hoosier Bar | 2 | Cox's Ranch | 2 |

Resolved, That we recommend that the only test to be applied to participants in the selection of Delegates to the County Convention shall be:

"Are you opposed to the policy of the present National Administration, which is subversive of the Constitution, the Laws, and the Union of our Fathers? Are you in favor of a speedy and honorable peace that will secure equal and exact justice to every section of the American Union? Will you support the nominee of the Democratic National Convention?"

Resolved, That these proceedings be published in the Placer Herald and Dutch Flat ENQUIRER.

On motion, Committee adjourned.

JOS. WALKUP, Chairman, pro tem.

JO HAMILTON, Secretary.
